in consequence of which she gradually emaciated, but did not think herself sick enough to require medical aid. About six months ago, I was called to see her, and found her looking badly, and she complained of loathing to food, and also of dyspeptic symptoms. After paying her a few visits she thought she was better, and I did not see her again until Nov 1/77, when upon the continuance of the symptoms I concluded that she was a victim of the cancerous cachexia. I could not locate it in any special organ. Dr Chris. Johnston agreed with me in the diagnosis and that death was inevitable.
